CONVENTIONAL

RIASEC is an acronym that represents the six primary types of personalities or vocational interests identified by psychologist John Holland. The model is often used in career counseling and guidance to help individuals understand their preferences and make informed decisions about their careers. Each letter in the acronym corresponds to a specific personality or interest type:

1. Realistic (R)
 2. Investigative (I)
 3. Artistic (A)
 4. Social (S)
 5. Enterprising (E)
 6. Conventional (C)

Key characteristics associated with a Conventional personality in the RIASEC model:

- 1.Organizational Skills: Conventional individuals are often highly organized and enjoy creating and maintaining order in their surroundings. They thrive in structured environments.
 - 2.Planning and Coordination: Individuals with a Conventional personality excel in planning and coordinating tasks. They are effective in managing schedules, timelines, and resources.
 - 3.Mathematical and Numerical Skills: Jobs that involve working with numbers, data analysis, and financial tasks may be appealing to individuals with a Conventional personality.
